

Please preserve the terms of the current no-call list laws! Even though our home phone is on the no-call list, we continue to be inundated with calls from groups that are not covered by the law. I cannot imagine the volume of calls or the depths of the frustration that we would undergo if telemarketing was allowed again. It accomplishes nothing, since my husband and I have taken to hanging up the moment we hear that initial silence that preceeds the pick up on the callers end. If I have severed relations with a bank, or anyone else, it is my choice and I would not wish to be pursued. If the business feels the need to pursue, they can continue to send out the volumes of mail that they send currently. At least I can deal with mail when it is convenient for me. Thank you.
